The DHSS Showcase is a living archive of Digital Humanities at RIT, built for sharing.

Problem Statement

DHSS engages faculty and students in a diverse body of work, but there is little ability share it.

"We believe that a digital presence that is community-oriented will enable the major to grow larger and increase visibility."

Project History

We are the third Capstone group to work on a DHSS Showcase.

2020-2021 Capstone students Marissa Burkland and Andrew England developed a project showcase with CBOX OpenLab. We continued where they left off, and expanded its scope.

The Project

The DHSS Showcase site is meant to archive and raise visibility for the major, and build community.

- students and faculty can post and update project profiles
- view courses offered by DHSS
- view and suggest upcoming events

Post your projects and learn about others

What We Learned

It is difficult to work with an already established project.

Roles, responsibilities, and goals are likely to shift as the project progresses.

Fixing the tool that you are using introduces some complications.

Collaborating with faculty has proven incredibly important and offered valuable perspectives.
